

A healthy Casco Bay is no accident.

Protecting and restoring our Bay takes research, monitoring, and a plan of action. Though there are major challenges to the Bay's natural resources, fortunately the Bay has a tremendous human resource: professionals and volunteers collaborating to protect its health.

Casco Bay Estuary Partnership coordinates the efforts of many people and organizations:

- Local, state, and federal government agencies
- Dozens of community groups and environmental organizations
- Universities and schools
- 42 towns and cities
- Local businesses
- Countless interested citizens

Look into the science at www.CascoBayEstuary.org

Read the master plan for Casco Bay. Discover the latest research in the most recent "State of the Bay" report. See what's improving, what's not. What projects are underway, which organizations are involved, what's critical right now.

Get involved. Protecting and restoring Casco Bay is a very big job. Won't you help? Support the organizations doing this vital work. Volunteer. Join. Get active in your community. Find out more at www.CascoBayEstuary.org

" Success lies in collaboration, having a solid, science-based plan, and then working together. Jointly, we find creative solutions; save time and money; and get results. Collaboration just makes sense. Keeping Casco Bay healthy benefits each and every one of us. "

CURTIS BOHLEN, PhD, Director, Casco Bay Estuary Partnership

protecting and restoring the ecological integrity of the Casco Bay watershed

Because
it all ends up here.